The War Today..

By DeWitt MacKenzie

THE BRITISH prime minister yesterday fired the first gun in the great political engagement which will tell how far England (like many other countries) has swung to the "left" during the war years while there has been no general election to register public leanings—a momentous development in a Europe which is on the verge of epochal changes!

Churchill flung his battle-banner during a conference of the dominant conservative party which he heads. He served notice that, contrary to widespread expectations, he not only has no intention of abandoning the premiership at the end of the war, but plans to carry right on into the peace.

Lashing out at "our socialist friends," he declared their program "for nationalizing all means of production, distribution and exchange," would imply "not only destruction of the whole existing system of society and life and labor, but the creation and enforcement of another system or systems borrowed from foreign lands, and alien minds." As opposed to this he named his own doctrine:

"At the head of our mainmast we fly the flag of free enterprise."

It was a bold and sensational attack, delivered with all the generalship learned in a generation of political struggle. It left nothing to imagination.

It was a declaration for progress—but against communistic methods. It's interesting that Churchill's speech also forecast the European war might be over "before the summer ends or even sooner." The

CASUALTIES IN IWO CONQUEST TOTAL 19,938

4,189 American Marines Killed, Navy Announcement Reveals

(By Associated Press)

U. S. PACIFIC FLEET HEADQUARTERS, Guam, Saturday, March 17.—The Navy announced today that 4,189 American Marines had been killed in the conquest of Iwo Jima, strategic Japanese island within 750 miles of Tokyo, and that the battle for two "has been won".

It added that 15,308 Marines had been wounded and 441 are missing, making a total of 19,938 casualties sustained by three Marine divisions in seizing the island.

"A very considerable number" of the wounded already have returned to action, the press release said.

Iwo was invaded Feb. 19 by the Third and Fourth Marine divisions, which were joined a few days later by the Fifth Marine division.

Adm. Chester W. Nimitz said today that the bloody battle, costliest invasion in the Pacific war, had been won and asserted the Marines fought "with certain knowledge of the cost of an objective which had to be taken".

Life-saver For B-29s

Iwo Jima is a life saver for hundreds of B-29 airmen whose raids on Japan have killed thousands of the enemy, a Superfort spokesman disclosed today.

A major breakthrough in the Philippines threatened to trap two Japanese battalions.

The spokesman said 30 Superforts have made emergency landings on Iwo for repairs or refueling, saving about 330 men from crash landings in the sea.

They were returning from the incendiary attacks on Tokyo, Osaka and Nagoya which Japan's propaganda spokesman admitted today burned thousands of Japanese to death, injured other thousands and left thousands more homeless.

Tokyo reports told of the flight of thousands from the bombed cities.

Gen. Patrick Killed

The Philippines breakthrough was accomplished by the 43rd division, which drove a two-mile wedge into the southern end of the Shumbu line on central Luzon island and seized the enemy's only escape roads.

On the northern end of the line a Japanese machine gun killed Maj. Gen. Edwin D. Patrick as he inspected advancing front lines of his sixth division.

Electrically operated land mines slowed the 41st division's northward advance from Zamboanga in the southern Philippines.

The Fifth Marine division drove into intense fire of one of several well armed and organized pockets of Japanese remaining on Iwo island. But "the major fighting is finished," said Vice Adm. Richmond Kelly Turner, commander of the Fifth Amphibious corps.

Turner said Marine deaths were less than a fifth of the 20,000 Japanese killed on Iwo.

Fighter Planes Set Round Trip Record

CALCUTTA, March 16.—The Eastern Air command announced today that 39 Japanese planes were destroyed, probably destroyed or damaged yesterday in what was described officially as the longest fighter raid of the war in any theater.

Fighters attacked the principal Japanese airfield in the Bangkok area of Thailand at Don Muang, just north of the city, taking the enemy defenders by surprise, with most of their planes grounded.

The location of the base for this raid was not indicated but it could not well have been less than a 1,500-mile round trip. Bangkok is some 750 miles from the Indian border and about 850 from the Eastern Air command field at Myittha in Burma.

Planes, personnel and airfield installations were strafed.

The bag included 20 planes destroyed, four probably destroyed and one Allied plane was reported missing from the raid.

Just Returned From The U. S. Ninth Army Front

LONDON, March 16.—American tank soldiers who have had to do the fighting want new tanks on the battle line and less talk about them in Washington.

(Seventeen words censored from this paragraph.)

(Gallagher's dispatch was written in response to information that there had been much discussion in Washington about the new General Pershing tank, equipped with guns of 90 millimeters, nearly four inches.

Secretary Stimson said last week that the General Pershing "is an answer to the German Royal Tiger in the sense that it is an improvement in line with the American concept of offensive warfare."

Gallagher apparently was not permitted to say whether the Pershing is a prisoner of war in Germany, his sister, Mrs. Donald Tullis, Franklin st., has been advised.

Corp. Stockwell has been in the service for two years and overseas since last October. His wife, Frances, makes her home in Cleveland.

A brother, Corp. George Stockwell, is in Key West, Fla., and another sister, Miss Betty Stockwell, and a brother, Alfred, live in Salem.

Juvenile Delinquency Causes Cited For Club

Delinquency among children is on the increase according to Maj. Bromwell Tripp of Cleveland, regional youth director for the Salvation Army, who spoke at a meeting of the Kiwanis club Thursday noon in the Memorial building. He talked on "Boys' Clubs."

Some of the reasons given by the speaker for this increase is the lack of parental supervision and the lack of organized recreation. The children have too much spending money for pleasure, Maj. Tripp declared. Their lack of morals is due to not having religious training and they disrespect authority, he added.

Maj. Tripp pointed out that the children of England bear up under intensive bombings but they cannot stand broken homes.

According to FBI statistics, half of the crimes committed in this country are by youths under the age of 25, he said.

To correct delinquency and bring the children back, Maj. Tripp suggests that the homes be strengthened. He said most of the delinquents are between the ages of 10 and 15.

Bing Crosby, Leo McCarey, Barry Fitzgerald, Margaret O'Brien, all as Irish as Paddy's pig, and Miss Bergman, walked off with the major share of honors as the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences awarded its "Oscars" last night.

The movie capital went all the way in voting "Going My Way" the most outstanding picture of 1944. The hit film outdistanced such nominees as "Wilson" and "Double Indemnity" and earned six awards. Included were:

"An Oscar" for Crooner Crosby for the best performance by an actor; another for Dublin-born Barry Fitzgerald, his co-star, for giving the finest supporting portrayal, and two to the man who directed and wrote the original story, Leo McCarey.

Miss Bergman won the best actress award for her vivid psycho-harassed role in "Gaslight."

Mine Operators Turn Down Lewis' Ton Royalty Demand

By HAROLD W. WARD

WASHINGTON, March 16.—Biluminous coal operators have turned down John L. Lewis' counter-proposals for a new contract today. They were estimated to net the average miner an increase of $1.69 a week.

The mine workers' president gave no indication of his reaction to the counter-proposals.

Lewis' 18 demands were estimated by the operators to amount to $3.33 a day and add 63 cents to the cost of mining a ton of coal. Lewis figured the added tonnage cost at 18 cents.

The operators rejected 12 of Lewis' demands and made counter offers on six.

Reject Royalty Demand

The principal demand rejected was for a 10-cent-a-ton royalty estimated to net the union $6,000,000 a year.

They suggested adopting the Illinois plan for reemploying veterans which altered the miners' proposal on that demand only slightly. The Illinois plan is shifter to reemployment provisions of the national Selective Service act.

Free explosives and accessories, which the operators said "increase the earnings of one class of employees and thereby create inequity between this class and all other classes of employees." They referred to tonnage and piece workers.

Inclusion of all but one foreman at each mine in the class of "mine workers," on the grounds that it would not be appropriate for supervisors "to be subject to discipline by a union which is controlled recently or indirectly by the men whom they supervise."

Elimination of the geographical differentials.

That the operators furnish only union made tools an explosives.

Improvement by both the union and the operators of sub-standard housing conditions and sanitary facilities. The operators said these issues could not be "discussed intelligently or decided in a national wage conference."

Right of Appeal

Free hats, goggles, shoes and boots. The operators said the War Labor board previously had ruled that such articles should be furnished by the miners.

The right of appeal by an aggrieved mine worker from a day wage classification to piece or tonnage work. The operators opposed this on the ground that management is solely responsible for direction of the working force.

The Lewis demand dealing with impurities, pay for six holidays, elimination of the requirement of a physical examination, and laying of track, all grouped under one demand, were rejected.

The demand to permit miners to strike beyond than ship coal to a strikebound plant or consumer.

It was an exciting evening for the 2,000 academy guests packed into the Chinese theater and the 5,000 who cramed Hollywood boulevard outside.

The Irving G. Thalberg award went to Darryl F. Zanuck, the man who brought "Wilson" to the screen, as the producer who fashioned "the most consistent high quality production last year" and a special award went to the child favorite, Margaret O'Brien.

Ethel Barrymore shared supporting role honors with Fitzgerald for her mother part to Cary Grant in "None But the Lonely Heart."

Crosby, accepting the award from Gary Cooper, cited "the freedom of opportunity in this land, where a director, Leo McCarey, can take a broken down crooner and lead him through a picture such as this."

Then he concluded, gazing at the statuette:

"Now if I can only win the Kentucky Derby."

It's The Husband That Counts, Not the Roses

The month of June has long been considered the month of roses and also of weddings. However, the marriage license records for the past two years show that times have changed.

In June of 1944 there were 67 licenses issued while in November there were 70.

June of 1943 shows 69 marriages with 71 in November.

The year 1942 shows June to be even farther behind with 129 marriages in August, 108 in December, and 105 in June.

It would seem that today's bride is more interested in obtaining the husband than in waiting for the proverbial settling of roses and orange blossoms.

Bridgehead Is Extended To 13 Miles

(By The Associated Press)

PARIS, March 16.—The First army cut the Ruhr-Frankfurt super highway east of the Rhine in two places today and extended the bridgehead to at least 13 miles in length.

The Americans beat off a German tank attack in heavy fighting four miles northeast of Linz, in the area where the bridgehead is six and a half miles wide. They fought into Koenigswinter in two-mile gains within three miles of open tank country leading to the great Ruhr basin.

"The Germans are building up for a major attack," Associated Press Correspondent Don Whitehead reported from the bridgehead.

To the south, the famous Fourth Armored division broke loose again in a swift, unchecked 12-mile dash southeast of Coblenz.

Lt. Gen. George S. Patton's Third army on the north and the Seventh army's new offensive on the south were squeezing the Germans from the rich Saarland and palatinate and developing every prospect of another great trap.

The Seventh army rolled up gains of six miles on the south side of the Saar, fought to the edge of its capital of Saarbruecken, outflanked the burned French fortress of Bitche and imminently threatened the Wissembourg gap into the palatinate.

Enemy Flees Before 4th Armored

Tens of towns fell, a thousand crack German troops surrendered before the new offensive was a dozen hours old.

The Fourth Armored division, commanded by Maj. Gen. Hugh J. Gaffey of Austin, Texas, dashed across the Hunsrueck plateau below Coblenz and covered a third of the distance to the great bend of the Rhine between Bingen and Frankfurt—threatened some of Germany's largest industrial centers.

Pilots spotted Germans fleeing the Saarland and palatinate toward Frankfurt and Mainz in the path of Gaffey's tanks.

The breakthrough threatened immediately to cut the whole network of supply and retreat routes behind Nazis reeling back from the Seventh army's offensive, powered by about 100,000 men.

Fighterbombers worked over convoys running for Frankfurt.

Other planes kept up the methodical sealoff of the whole communications area from Limburg to Dortmund. Thunderbolts paced the fourth armored divisions dash along the Rhine, blasting towns in its path.

YANKS PRAISE ENEMY TANKS

Doughboys At Front Want New Equipment, Less Talk In Washington

LONDON, March 16.—American tank soldiers who have had to do the fighting want new tanks on the battle line and less talk about them in Washington.

Gallagher's dispatch was written in response to information that there had been much discussion in Washington about the new General Pershing tank, equipped with guns of 90 millimeters, nearly four inches.

Secretary Stimson said last week that the General Pershing "is an answer to the German Royal Tiger in the sense that it is an improvement in line with the American concept of offensive warfare."

Gallagher apparently was not permitted to say whether the Pershing has been in action in Europe. A new wide tread and increased flotation has made the General Pershing a better wet weather performer than the General Shermans. Hitherto the main dependence of U. S. armored forces.

"Give us enough gun to knock out the Tiger and we will carry it around on trucks," is the tank man's answer.

"Fed Up" Is Reply

Men and officers who have fought in Sherman for two years say they are fed up with Washington state-ments praising American equipment.

Arousing the most ire was a dispatch about a month ago which quoted the American army chief of ordnance as saying the Germans lost two tanks for every one the Americans lost and that American equipment was superior in every detail.

Mine Operators Turn Down Lewis' Ton Royalty Demand

By HAROLD W. WARD

WASHINGTON, March 16.—Biluminous coal operators handed John L. Lewis their counter-proposals for a new contract today. They were estimated to net the average miner an increase of $1.69 a week.

The mine workers' president gave no indication of his reaction to the counter-proposals.

Lewis' 18 demands were estimated by the operators to amount to $3.33 a day and add 63 cents to the cost of mining a ton of coal. Lewis figured the added tonnage cost at 18 cents.

The operators rejected 12 of Lewis' demands and made counter-offers on six.

Reject Royalty Demand

The principal demand rejected was for a 10-cent-a-ton royalty estimated to net the union $6,000,000 a year.

They suggested adopting the Illinois plan for reemploying veterans which altered the miners' proposal on G.I. demand only slightly. The Illinois plan is shadier to reemployment provisions of the national Selective Service act.

Free explosives and accessories which the operators said would increase the earnings of one class of employees and "thereby create inequity between this class and all other classes of employees." They referred to tonnage and piece workers.

Inclusion of all but one foreman at each mine in the class of "mine workers," on the grounds that it would not be appropriate for supervisors "to be subject to discipline by a union which is controlled recently or indirectly by the men whom they supervise."

Elimination of the geographical differentials.

That the operators furnish only union made tools an explosives.

Improvement by both the union and the operators of sub-standard housing conditions and sanitary facilities. The operators said these issues could not be "discussed intelligently or decided in a national wage conference."

Right of Appeal

Free hats, goggles, shoes and boots. The operators said the War Labor board previously had ruled that such articles should be furnished by the miners.

The right of appeal by an aggrieved mine worker from a day wage classification to race or tonnage work. The operators opposed this on the ground that management is solely responsible for direction of the working force.

The Lewis demand dealing with impurities, pay for six holidays, elimination of the requirement of a physical examination, and laying of track, all grouped under one demand, were rejected.

The demand to permit miners to strike rather than ship coal to a strikebound plant or consumer.

It was an exciting evening for the 2,000 academy guests packed into the Chinese theater and the 5,000 who cramed Hollywood boulevard outside.

The Irving G. Thalberg award went to Darryl F. Zanuck, the man who brought "Wilson" to the screen, the producer who fashioned "the most consistent high quality production last year," and a special award went to the child favorite, Margaret O'Brien.

Ethel Barrymore shared supporting role honors with Fitzgerald for her mother part to Cary Grant in "None But the Lonely Heart."

Crosby, accepting the award from Gary Cooper, cited "the freedom of opportunity in this land where a director, Leo McCarey, can take a broken down crooner and lead him through a picture such as this."

Then he concluded, gazing at the statuette: "Now if I can only win the Kentucky Derby."

U. S. Divisions

Fourth Armored; Dashed from Moselle bridgehead in drive to trap Saar defenders.

Fifth infantry; Held Moselle bridgehead.

36th infantry; Virtually cleared the Haguenau area.

42nd infantry; Gained southeast of Bitche.

70th infantry; Reached South bank of Saar river.

90th infantry; Held Moselle bridgehead.

100th infantry; Advanced north of Bitche.

103rd infantry; Crossed Moser river in Saar offensive.

At Edge of Saarbruecken

Seventh army troops fought at the very edge of Saarbruecken and occupied Pechingen, six miles inside the Saarland, and Eschheim, five miles south of St. Ingbert (21,000). Others occupied Obergailbach and advanced a mile into the German Baumbusch woods to a point eight miles south of the steel mill city of Zweibruecken in the palatinate.

The siege of the fortress of Bitche was tightened with the capture of Freudenberg and Reyserswiller. Bitchoffen, eight miles northwest of Haguenau, fell and the German command announced the loss of north Haguenau itself.

It's The Husband That Counts, Not the Roses

The month of June has long been considered the month of roses and also of weddings. However, the marriage license records for the past two years show that times have changed.

In June of 1944 there were 67 licenses issued while in November there were 79.

June of 1943 shows 69 marriages with 71 in November.

The year 1942 shows June to be even farther behind with 129 marriages in August, 108 in December, and 105 in June.

It would seem that today's bride is more interested in obtaining the husband than in waiting for the proverbial setting of roses and orange blossoms.

Bridgehead Is Extended To 13 Miles

(By The Associated Press)

PARIS, March 16.—The First army cut the Ruhr-Frankfurt super highway east of the Rhine in two places today and extended the bridgehead to at least 13 miles in length.

The Americans beat off a German tank attack in heavy fighting four miles northeast of Linz, in the area where the bridgehead is six and a half miles wide. They fought into Koenigswinter in two-mile gains within three miles of open tank country leading to the great Ruhr basin.

"The Germans are building up for a major attack," Associated Press Correspondent Don Whitehead reported from the bridgehead.

To the south, the famous Fourth Armored division broke loose again in a swift, unchecked 12-mile dash southeast of Coblenz.

Lt. Gen. George S. Patton's Third army on the north and the Seventh army's new offensive on the south were squeezing the Germans from the rich Saarland and palatinate and developing every prospect of another great trap.

The Seventh army rolled up gains of six miles on the south side of the Saar, fought to the edge of its capital of Saarbruecken, outflanked the burned French fortress of Bitche and imminently threatened the Wissembourg gap into the palatinate.

Enemy Flees Before 4th Armored

Tens of towns fell, a thousand track German troops surrendered before the new offensive was a dozen hours old.

The Fourth Armored division, commanded by Maj. Gen. Hugh J. Gaffey of Austin, Texas, dashed across the Hunsrueck plateau below Coblenz and covered a third of the distance to the great bend of the Rhine between Bingen and Frankfurt—threatened some of Germany's largest industrial centers.

Pilots spotted Germans fleeing the Saarland and palatinate toward Frankfurt and Mainz in the path of Gaffey's tanks.

The breakthrough threatened immediately to cut the whole network of supply and retreat routes behind Nazis reeling back from the Seventh army's offensive, powered by about 100,000 men.

Fighterbombers worked over convoys running for Frankfurt.

Other planes kept up the methodical scalloping of the whole communications area from Limburg to Dortmund. Thunderbolts paced the fourth armored divisions dash along the Rhine, blasting towns in its path.

The Nod

President Roosevelt's press conference nod in favor of professional baseball is a passing strange way to do business. Offhand, it would seem to be a job for War Mobilizer Byrnes to give out this good news—or is it his job to give out bad news?

It raises the question as to who and what determine these anxiously awaited decisions. Conventions are banned, but not all conventions. Travel is frowned upon, but not all travel. Horse racing is out, but baseball is in. Night clubs must close at midnight, lights must be turned off on Main street, it is thumbs down on this and that, thumbs up on this and that. But why should War Mobilizer Byrnes turn thumbs down and President Roosevelt turn thumbs up?

Baseball's right to go ahead with its plans for whatever kind of a season can be played with its residue of manpower is a popular decision. The public is entitled to whatever harmless amusement it can obtain—and certainly baseball qualifies as harmless amusement. But it would be considerably more gratifying if the executive official who has been handing out the curtailments had a chance to hand out the good news, too.

Hitting The Ceiling

It is apparent that Chester Bowles, OPA administrator, has a great deal of confidence in ceiling prices. He is currently interested in a move to put them on public amusements.

There is undoubtedly a great deal to be said for them as a means of making price inflation more difficult to manage, but Mr. Bowles must be aware of a common mystery in this connection.

With such unmentionable exceptions as occur in the higher class chiseling circles, all of us are living under ceiling prices. Theoretically, the ceiling is the limit.

Yet, the cost of living continues to rise bit by bit despite the ceilings. First, of course, everything immediately rises to the ceiling, but after that it seems that the ceiling itself keeps rising—at least when a patriot looks down where things used to be he can see that he is a lot higher than he should be. This may be just another of those things that happen in wartime, or it might be some new wrinkle in the law of gravity. Whatever it is, science should be called on to explain it, unless Mr. Bowles feels like tackling the assignment.

But Is It Feasible?

First overt sign that the wartime spending binge will help a morning-after is the reservation written into Lend-Lease by the House of Representatives—"for war use only".

This reflects public apprehension of a federal tendency to look upon everything as possible. The growing mood of taxpayers is to ask first, "Is it feasible?"

The United States has distributed its vast resources with a lavish hand in two wars, using different procedure, but always with the same effect. Every ounce of material leaving this country and not replaced is net loss. Nothing can change that fact.

Lend-Lease has been the prime economic weapon of World War II, but the bulk of the ultimate cost—the final price of the garden hose that was made available to put out the fire, to use President Roosevelt's simile—must fall on American shoulders. Anything has been possible, to deal with the emergency. The question now is what is the duration of the emergency? Is Lend-Lease exclusively a war weapon, or is it the potential forerunner of an experiment in international pump-priming?

The House has tried to forestall that possibility by prohibiting use of Lend-Lease for post-war relief, reconstruction and rehabilitation. It seems likely the Senate will agree to the precaution. Certainly it seems desirable that the Senate, too, should begin to sober up from the wartime spending binge.

Saving Idle Ships

New rust preventive and dehumidifying processes have been developed by the Navy, giving promise that a future emergency will not find our war and merchant fleets in the deplorable condition that they were when the present European war began.

The new processes are said to save both maintenance cost and labor, and to enable an idle vessel to be put in operation in a matter of days rather than months, as has been the case.

Deterioration cost us heavily between the two wars. According to Frank J. Taylor, president of the American Merchant Marine Institute, only 113 cargo ships were left in 1939 out of 1,000 laid up after World War I. And of the 113, only 25 were in operating condition.

Shipping shortages and delay cost us heavily for a long time after Pearl Harbor, and the problem is not yet licked. But it is at least encouraging to learn that, if there should be a "next time," an adequate reserve fleet of merchant ships will be in the front line of our national defense, where it belongs.

A Free Press — In Practice

By James Thrasher

One of the best pieces of news to come out of the Chapultepec conference has to do with the very subject of news. It appears that the Pan-American foreign ministers gathered there are at last convinced that international cooperation and peace are the people's business, and that the press, as the people's representatives and observers, have a right to know what goes on.

And so the Chapultepec conference has become, according to newsmen on the spot, a shining example of press freedom in action. All accredited reporters receive a copy of each resolution approved for presentation to the conference, and are kept informed of the resolution's progress and disposition.

Newsman are permitted to attend almost all sessions of the various commissions. They even get summaries of the proceedings at the few secret sessions which must of necessity be held.

All this is in welcome contrast to the smug and senseless goings-on at the Hot Springs food conference in 1943, when armed guards kept reporters from even getting close to the scene of the meetings. It is a decided improvement over Dumbarton Oaks, where solemn secrecy naturally gave birth to widespread suspicion and rumor.

Apparently the intelligent treatment of the press at Chapultepec is a result of the resolution on press freedom which Secretary of State Stettinius presented to the conference. This reflects an admirable change of heart for Mr. Stettinius who, as under secretary, defended the need of secrecy at Dumbarton Oaks with obvious conviction, but without the logic which supports his present stand.

It has long been demonstrated that one of the first and most powerful tools of despotism was an embargo on the free access to truth. The Allied governments have recognized and condemned this evil as a source of power to Hitler, Mussolini and the Japanese war lords, and one cause of this war.

But at the same time the Allied governments on occasion have placed an unreasonable embargo of silence on matters of highest public importance. Now a step has been taken to end this anomalous situation.

If Mr. Stettinius by his precept and the Chapultepec conference by its example have dealt a blow to unnecessary secrecy and political censorship, then the meeting in Mexico City will have augmented its other accomplishments by a rich and unexpected dividend.

Instead of the Russians eventually being handed the key to Berlin, wouldn't a shovel be more appropriate?

A service association in Lancaster, Pa., sent 700 packages of shaving cream and styptic pencils to members of the armed forces overseas—and 18 of them WACs. Well, they're doing a man's job!

How easy we get used to things! It seems only natural these days that a girl's complexion should be artificial.

Congenital Defects That Affect Kidneys

BY HERMAN N. BUNDESEN, M. D.

WHEN DEFECTS or faulty structure of various organs are present at the time of birth they are called congenital defects. They may affect any part of the body, but they are quite common in the urinary system, that is, in the kidneys, the bladder, and the ureters, which lead from the kidneys to the bladder. It is important that these defects be recognized early and corrected as soon as possible in order to keep permanent and widespread damage to the kidneys from occurring.

The most common defect affecting the kidneys in young children is known as hydronephrosis, in which the fluid collects in the pelvis of the kidney. This may be produced by a number of conditions. There may be an extra blood vessel which presses on the ureter as it comes from the kidney. There may be bands of scar tissue which block the ureter at the point where it joins the kidney. There may be stones or tumor growths which press on the ureter, or the neck of the bladder may be blocked, which will result in back pressure on the kidneys. The hydronephrosis occurs because the urine cannot gain exit from the kidneys and causes the pelvis of the kidney to stretch. The pressure of the kidney tissue, caused by the fluid, will lead to wasting of the kidney substance.

Of course, the treatment in these instances is to determine first of all where the obstruction is located, and to relieve it. Operations are often necessary in such instances.

Other kidney disorders present at birth include kidney stones, which are relatively rare in children but have been found once in a while in new born babies. The most common cancerous growth in children is one affecting the kidney; it is known as Wilms' tumor. This growth may be quite large and may fill half or more of the child's abdomen. There usually is no pain or tenderness present. Another congenital defect is a double pelvis and ureter. Still other defects consist of the absence of one or both kidneys and failure of the kidneys to develop. This is known as aplasia or hypoplasia. Injuries and infections of the kidney in children frequently occur.

The diagnosis of these conditions is dependent on a careful examination of the urine. The presence of blood in the urine may indicate a tumor growth, kidney stone or some injury. The presence of pus cells means infection.

After examination of the urine is made, X-rays of the kidneys are taken, and the patient is carefully examined to determine the cause for the trouble present. With immediate treatment, many of these conditions can be completely relieved.

YES BOYS, WE MEAN IT

Kite-flying season is here again — and with it the chance that power flowing to busy war plants may be interrupted, because some boy's kite or kite string became entangled in electric wires.

Factories can all afford to have interruptions to power service today. They are all busy turning out materials and parts for guns, tanks, planes, ships... maybe the very thing that some friend of yours now overseas needs to help him in fighting the enemy.

So boys, watch where you fly your kites. Pick out an open field, away from electric wires. And remember, too, that if that kite string of yours gets tangled in a power line, you might be killed. Don't let it happen to you.

It is apparent that Chester Bowles, OPA administrator, has a great deal of confidence in ceiling prices. He is currently interested in a move to put them on public amusements.

There is undoubtedly a great deal to be said for them as a means of making price inflation more difficult to manage, but Mr. Bowles must be aware of a common mystery in this connection.

With such unmentionable exceptions as occur in the higher class chiseling circles, all of us are living under ceiling prices. Theoretically, the ceiling is the limit.

Yet, the cost of living continues to rise bit by bit despite the ceilings. First, of course, everything immediately rises to the ceiling, but after that it seems that the ceiling itself keeps rising—at least when a patriot looks down where things used to be he can see that he is a lot higher than he should be. This may be just another of those things that happen in wartime, or it might be some new wrinkle in the law of gravity. Whatever it is, science should be called on to explain it, unless Mr. Bowles feels like tackling the assignment.

But Is It Feasible?

First overt sign that the wartime spending binge will help a morning-after is the reservation writer into Lend-Lease by the House of Representatives—"for war use only".

This reflects public apprehension of a federal tendency to look upon everything as possible. The growing mood of taxpayers is to ask first, "Is it feasible?"

The United States has distributed its vast resources with a lavish hand in two wars, using different procedure, but always with the same effect. Every ounce of material leaving this country and not replaced is net loss. Nothing can change that fact.

Lend-Lease has been the prime economic weapon of World War II, but the bulk of the ultimate cost—the final price of the garden hose that was made available to put out the fire, to use President Roosevelt's simile—must fall on American shoulders. Anything has been possible, to deal with the emergency. The question now is what is the duration of the emergency? Is Lend-Lease exclusively a war weapon, or is it the potential forerunner of an experiment in international pump-priming?

The House has tried to forestall that possibility by prohibiting use of Lend-Lease for post-war relief, reconstruction and rehabilitation. It seems likely the Senate will agree to the precaution. Certainly it seems desirable that the Senate, too, should begin to sober up from the wartime spending binge.

Saving Idle Ships

New rust preventive and dehumidifying processes have been developed by the Navy, giving promise that a future emergency will not find our war and merchant fleets in the deplorable condition that they were when the present European war began.

The new processes are said to save both maintenance cost and labor, and to enable an idle vessel to be put in operation in a matter of days rather than months, as has been the case.

Deterioration cost us heavily between the two wars. According to Frank J. Taylor, president of the American Merchant Marine Institute, only 113 cargo ships were left in 1939 out of 1,000 laid up after World War I. And of the 113, only 25 were in operating condition.

Shipping shortages and delay cost us heavily for a long time after Pearl Harbor, and the problem is not yet licked. But it is at least encouraging to learn that, if there should be a "next time," an adequate reserve fleet of merchant ships will be in the front line of our national defense, where it belongs.

For Saturday, March 17.

ALTHOUGH there is indication of much changing about, with commotion or agitation, with impulses and emotions under tension, yet the prospect is not a particularly harmonious or desirable one. With a chain of minor adverse testimonies it may be advisable to work along lines of least resistance, to attend to needful duties prudently, with consideration for public rules and regulations. Do not attempt to settle any old scores or grudges, or drag secrets into the open.

Those whose birthday it is may have a year of change, travel or moving about in new directions.

Old scores or quarrels, buried secrets dragged into the limelight, might interfere with pleasant and lucrative relations.

A child born on this day will be moderately clever, lively, possibly original and independent, but adverse conditions call for consideration.

A Free Press — In Practice

By James Thrasher

One of the best pieces of news to come out of the Chapultepec conference has to do with the very subject of news. It appears that the Pan-American foreign ministers gathered there are at last convinced that international cooperation and peace are the people's business, and that the press, as the people's representatives and observers, have a right to know what goes on.

And so the Chapultepec conference has become, according to newsmen on the spot, a shining example of press freedom in action. All accredited reporters receive a copy of each resolution approved for presentation to the conference, and are kept informed of the resolution's progress and disposition.

Newsmen are permitted to attend almost all sessions of the various commissions. They even get summaries of the proceedings at the few secret sessions which must of necessity be held.

All this is in welcome contrast to the smug and senseless goings-on at the Hot Springs food conference in 1943, when armed guards kept reporters from even setting close to the scene of the meetings. It is a decided improvement over Dumbarton Oaks, where solemn secrecy naturally gave birth to widespread suspicion and rumor.

Apparently the intelligent treatment of the press at Chapultepec is a result of the resolution on press freedom which Secretary of State Stettinius presented to the conference. This reflects an admirable change of heart for Mr. Stettinius who, as under secretary, defended the need of secrecy at Dumbarton Oaks with obvious conviction, but without the logic which supports his present stand.

It has long been demonstrated that one of the first and most powerful tools of despotism was an embargo on the free access to truth. The Allied governments have recognized and condemned this evil as a source of power to Hitler, Mussolini and the Japanese war lords, and one cause of this war.

But at the same time the Allied governments on occasion have placed an unreasonable embargo of silence on matters of highest public importance. Now a step has been taken to end this anomalous situation.

If Mr. Stettinius by his precept and the Chapultepec conference by its example have dealt a blow to unnecessary secrecy and political censorship, then the meeting in Mexico City will have augmented its other accomplishments by a rich and unexpected dividend.

Instead of the Russians eventually being handed the key to Berlin, wouldn't a shovel be more appropriate?

A service association in Lancaster, Pa., sent 700 packages of shaving cream and styptic pencils to members of the armed forces overseas—and 18 of them WACS. Well, they're doing a man's job!

How easy we get used to things! It seems only natural these days that a girl's complexion should be artificial.

Congenital Defects That Affect Kidneys

BY HERMAN N. BUNDESEN, M.D.

WHEN DEFECTS or faulty structure of various organs are present at the time of birth they are called congenital defects. They may affect any part of the body, but they are quite common in the urinary system, that is, in the kidneys, the bladder, and the ureters, which lead from the kidneys to the bladder. It is important that these defects be recognized early and corrected as soon as possible in order to keep permanent and widespread damage to the kidneys from occurring.

The most common defect affecting the kidneys in young children is known as hydronephrosis, in which the fluid collects in the pelvis of the kidney. This may be produced by a number of conditions. There may be an extra blood vessel which presses on the ureter as it comes from the kidney. There may be bands of scar tissue which block the ureter at the point where it joins the kidney. There may be stones or tumor growths which press on the ureter, or the neck of the bladder may be blocked, which will result in back pressure on the kidneys. The hydronephrosis occurs because the urine cannot gain exit from the kidneys and causes the pelvis of the kidney to stretch. The pressure of the kidney tissue, caused by the fluid, will lead to wasting of the kidney substance.

Of course, the treatment in these instances is to determine first of all where the obstruction is located, and to relieve it. Operations are often necessary in such instances. Other kidney disorders present at birth include kidney stones, which are relatively rare in children but have been found once in a while in newborn babies. The most common cancerous growth in children is one affecting the kidney; it is known as Wilms' tumor. This growth may be quite large and may fill half or more of the child's abdomen. There usually is no pain or tenderness present. Another congenital defect is a double pelvis and ureter. Still other defects consist of the absence of one or both kidneys and failure of the kidneys to develop. This is known as aplasia or hypoplasia. Injuries and infections of the kidney in children frequently occur.

The diagnosis of these conditions is dependent on a careful examination of the urine. The presence of blood in the urine may indicate a tumor growth, kidney stone or some injury. The presence of pus cells means infection.

After examination of the urine is made, X-rays of the kidneys are taken, and the patient is carefully examined to determine the cause for the trouble present. With immediate treatment, many of these conditions can be completely relieved.

Say, Boys - - - how about giving the WAR FACTORIES a break?

YES BOYS, WE MEAN IT.

Kite-flying season is here again — and with it the chance that power flowing to busy war plants may be interrupted, because some boy's kite or kite string became entangled in electric wires.

Factories can all afford to have interruptions to power service today. They are all busy turning out materials and parts for guns, tanks, planes, ships... maybe the very thing that some friend of yours now overseas needs to help him in fighting the enemy.

So boys, watch where you fly your kites. Pick out an open field, away from electric wires. And remember, too, that if that kite string of yours gets tangled in a power line, you might be killed. Don't let it happen to you.

Toe The Line, Ohio Tavern Owners Told By Lausche

COLUMBUS, March 16. — Gov. Frank J. Lausche would revoke the liquor licenses of bars which "flout the law and drag into the dirt decent businesses."

He said at a press conference yesterday that he had told Liquor director Robert Solingen and the four-member Liquor Control board "that in my opinion the abuses will be remedied only when the board begins revoking licenses."

Records of the state liquor board show of 428 cases heard last year, 14 permits were revoked in 23 cases, 474 suspensions issued in 276 cases, 54 cases involving 87 permits dismissed and penalties withheld in 6 cases involving 130 permits. Most retailers hold more than one permit.

Revocations in 1943 totaled 113 permits in 81 cases; 1942 showed 197 permits in 282 cases and 1941 had 526 permits in 393 cases.

Total cases heard have been on the decline since the peak year of 1941 when 1,621 were docketed. The 1942 total was 1,359 cases and 1943 had 795 cases.

partment. It was carried by Stars and Stripes, the army newspaper.

One American colonel who has fought across Western Europe said: "I would like to have him in the lead tank during one of our attacks some day. He would damn soon change his tune."

The German army may well have lost two tanks to every one lost by the Allies, but this figure apparently included tanks the Germans lost to the air force, bazookas, artillery, mines and all other means.

Considered Good Trade
The heaviest armored fighting on the Western front during the fall and winter was during the Ninth army's drive to the Roer in November. In that action men of the American Second Armored division, experienced and skilled, considered the trade of two Sherman tanks for one Tiger or one Panther "good hunting."

American tank men say they feel the Germans have been using Tigers and Panthers for two years, and that only as the war is nearing an end are the American armies able to produce their equal, and that only in dribble form. (165 words censored)

There has been almost no tank fighting in the Ninth army's drive to the Rhine and the First and Third army attacks in the south. The Germans have been using their few tanks to support their infantry counter-attacks. They have been depending on artillery and anti-tank guns to halt American armor, which they have been unable to do.

Dealings, lively at the opening, tapered later and top plus signs running to 2 or more points were reduced or cancelled in a number of instances near the fourth hour.

Eastern Air Lines and United Air Lines registered new highs for the year. Ahead most of the time were American Airlines, Santa Fe, U. S. Steel, Sears Roebuck, Du Pont, Texas Co. and Standard Oil (N.J.) The recently sprinting Atlantic Coast Line was thrown for a loss.

The War Today By DeWitt MacKenzie

launching of his political offensive indicates he indeed believes the Hitlerian conflict is drawing to a close.

What are we likely to see in the general election which Churchill has promised as soon as possible after the European war ends?

It's 10 years since Britain went to the polls and in that time she has swung "left." We shouldn't make the mistake of thinking that traditionally conservative England has swung heavily to the "red." She has gone "left" in the sense that she recognizes the time has come when there must be sweeping social and economic reforms for the general good.

Only the election can tell us how much England has changed. It's possible that "our socialist friends," as Churchill calls them—most of whom belong to the labor party—may return a majority. However, as things now look the conservatives have very promising chances.

Churchill seems to have taken much wind out of the opposition sails by laying down a sweeping program of post-war reforms which include many of the labor demands. The coalition war-government, in which the labor party is represented, has approved this program.

Probably the most potent element in this situation is the fact that the whole country is almost worshipful of the man who brought England through the war. It's certain the people will find it hard to deny "Winnie" anything although there's much political opposition to him. Add to this the fact that the labor party is suffering from a dearth of outstanding leadership, and the Churchillian position seems strong.

Much can happen between now and general election, but the situation may develop like this: "Winnie" (that is, the conservative party) may be given a majority in gratitude for his war leadership. Then, in the succeeding general election, "our socialist friends" may come into power.

Cites Need of More Boarding Homes To Care For Children

(By Associated Press)

COLUMBUS, March 16.—Welfare Director Frazier Reams asserted today the need for suitable licensed boarding houses for "thousands of neglected and dependent children" was critical, and called on Ohioans to open such establishments.

"Among our home front casualties are thousands of children whose home lives have been broken by war and who are in need of the guidance and love which a foster father and mother can provide. We must not permit these children to go neglected," Reams said.

Boarding homes for children in Ohio since outbreak of the war dropped from 4,967 at the end of 1941 to 4,615 caring for some 15,000 at the end of 1944, Reams reported.

Reams pointed out that licenses could be obtained without cost from the Welfare department or 103 local welfare agencies throughout the state after an inspection to insure proper housing and environment for children.

"Temporary boarding care for a limited number of children, even one or two, would help the situation," Reams said.

The director emphasized that the placing of children in boarding houses did not mean they were available for adoption.

A department crack-down was ordered on boarding homes operating without a state license or those indulging in overcrowding.

The War Today By DeWitt MacKenzie

launching of his political offensive indicates he indeed believes the Hitlerian conflict is drawing to a close.

What are we likely to see in the general election which Churchill has promised as soon as possible after the European war ends? It's 10 years since Britain went to the polls and in that time she has swung "left." We shouldn't make the mistake of thinking that traditionally conservative England has swung heavily to the "red." She has gone "left" in the sense that she recognizes the time has come when there must be sweeping social and economic reforms for the general good.

Only the election can tell us how much England has changed. It's possible that "our socialist friends," as Churchill calls them—most of whom belong to the labor party—may return a majority. However, as things now look the conservatives have very promising chances.

Churchill seems to have taken much wind out of the opposition sails by laying down a sweeping program of post-war reforms which include many of the labor demands. The coalition war-government, in which the labor party is represented, has approved this program.

Probably the most potent element in this situation is the fact that the whole country is almost worshipful of the man who brought England through the war. It's certain the people will find it hard to deny "Winnie" anything although there's much political opposition to him. Add to this the fact that the labor party is suffering from a dearth of outstanding leadership, and the Churchillian position seems strong.

Much can happen between now and general election, but the situation may develop like this: "Winnie" (that is, the conservative party) may be given a majority in gratitude for his war leadership. Then, in the succeeding general election, "our socialist friends" may come into power.

Cites Need of More Boarding Homes To Care For Children

(By Associated Press)

COLUMBUS, March 16.—Welfare Director Frazier Reams asserted today the need for suitable licensed boarding houses for "thousands of neglected and dependent children" was critical, and called on Ohioans to open such establishments.

"Among our home front casualties are thousands of children whose home lives have been broken by war and who are in need of the guidance and love which a foster father and mother can provide. We must not permit these children to go neglected," Reams said.

Boarding homes for children in Ohio since outbreak of the war dropped from 4,967 at the end of 1941 to 4,615 caring for some 15,000 at the end of 1944, Reams reported. Reams pointed out that licenses could be obtained without cost from the Welfare department or 103 local welfare agencies throughout the state after an inspection to insure proper housing and environment for children.

"Temporary boarding care for a limited number of children, even one or two, would help the situation," Reams said.

The director emphasized that the placing of children in boarding houses did not mean they were available for adoption. A department crack-down was ordered on boarding homes operating without a state license or those indulging in overcrowding.

Death's BRIGHT DIAMONDS

by Lionel Mosher

THE STORY: Nick tells Pat about the plane-crash, says he intends to slip away quietly for a few days until the Calaveras affair blows over. Pat suggests he go to The Ledges.

IX
The Ledges, the Hudsons' summer home, was 30 rooms of early colonial exterior on the finest stretch of shore north of Boston. I had never been especially taken by the austerity of the place, but it had pleasant associations for me and the scenery was magnificent.

It was dark when I reached the next night. There was a light in the Cock and Kettle. Before the war they had served delicious buckwheat cakes. I was hungry and the idea of hiding out at The Ledges had seemed less urgent as a whole day had gone by with nobody killed. So I stopped and had my steak.

That's where I saw Brenda Temple. Or perhaps I should say Brenda saw me.

She was on her way out as I came in. She stood to one side while her father paid the check. At first I thought she was not going to speak. She looked straight at me and through me with those remarkable eyes of hers. I was on the point of going by, when she said coolly:

"Why Nicholas Trent. How are you?"

"I'm fine, Brenda."
"What are you doing here?"
"Eating," I said. "It's a vice of mine."

"I read about you in the papers," she said. "Father, you remember Nicholas Trent?"

I looked at Bruce Temple. He was a great rock of a man with a face like chipped flint. He scarcely glanced at me.

"Can't say that I do," he said. "Come, Brenda."

And Brenda came. They walked out and left me standing there. They had acted strangely and the two of them lurked in my mind for the better part of an hour until I had more pressing matters to think of.

I drove down the Sandy Point road on as dark a night as a man could wish for. When I got to the gates of The Ledges, I got out and fished in my pocket for the key to the padlock that held the massive wooden barrier. A light mist had begun to fall and it beat against my face like tiny needles of cracked ice. The gate opened dismally as I swung it open.

By the time I had fumbled for minutes in the cold among a dozen keys to a dozen doors, the whole idea of vegetating for a week at The Ledges had become impressively nonsensical. The only thing that kept me from going back to town was the fear that someone would think that I was afraid of the dark — which I was at that particular moment.

Finally I got the door open and went inside. The bitter chill of a closed house laid its hand on my spine. I snapped the switch of my flashlight and the beam burrowed feebly into the darkness. I saw the shadows of objects hanging from the ceiling and beneath the glint of metal. I was in the kitchen and the suspended objects were pots and pans hung over the stove.

I went to the wall, pushed the switch, and a second later the fluorescent tubes sprang to light. Suddenly, I remembered Pat's words: "The electricity will be turned off, but there are oil lamps in one of the kitchen cupboards." That little feeling of warmth, upon seeing the lights, evaporated. I stood stock still and listened. There was no sound except the uneasy beat of the sea on the rocks beyond the far side of the house.

There was a rack of wood in the corner and a bin of coal beside it. I laid a fire in the big range, lit it, and then straddled a metal kitchen stool to smoke and take stock. As the heat from the fire gradually filled the room, I felt better. I brought in the hamper of food from the car and went to the electric refrigerator. I swung open the door; the light flashed on, and I set the hamper carefully down on the floor. The chest was completely stocked with food.

I shut the door and stood rubbing my chin and looking thoughtfully across the kitchen at the white swinging door with the black leather panels. Beyond that should be the dining room. And beyond that, if I remember correctly, somewhere on the sea-side of the house, Phineas Hudson's library, high-vaulted with a great beam-studded ceiling and paneled with somber, thought-stifling fumed oak. There was a fireplace in it large enough to burn a forest of trees, and a chair soft and deep enough to sleep in.

I started through the swinging door resolutely enough. The feeble beam of my flashlight was lost in the vastness of that dining room. I began to look for the light switch. I could hear the rain beating against the windows, and as I started along the wall in a systematic search for the light, I heard another sound. It stopped me. A low short rumble. For a single instant I could not identify it. Then I had it. Thunder. End of summer, we used to say, when a single peal of thunder came in the fall. And I started along the wall again, laughing a bit shakily at myself.

Then I heard a second sound and it wasn't thunder. It was much too soft and stealthy for that. This time just the faintest noise like a quick intake of breath. Now my every sense was alive with red lights. I kept moving, feeling along the wall for the switch, pointing the beam ahead of me.

I reached a corner and turned my light onto the next wall. And the pale beam fell squarely upon the face of a man.

Death's BRIGHT DIAMONDS

by Lionel Mosher

THE STORY: Nick tells Pat about the plane-crash, says he intends to slip away quietly for a few days until the Calavestri affair blows over. Pat suggests he go to The Ledges.

IX
The Ledges, the Hudsons' summer home, was 30 rooms of early colonial austerity on the finest stretch of shore north of Boston. I had never been especially taken by the austerity of the place, but it had pleasant associations for me and the scenery was magnificent.

It was dark when I reached Minot on the way to Sandy Point the next night. There was a light in The Cock and Kettle. Before the war they had served delicious hickory-broiled steaks. I was hungry and the idea of hiding out at The Ledges had seemed less urgent as a whole day had gone by with nobody killed. So I stopped and had my steak.

That's where I saw Brenda Temple. Or perhaps I should say Brenda saw me.

She was on her way out as I came in. She stood to one side while her father paid the check. At first I thought she was not going to speak. She looked straight at me and through me with those remarkable eyes of hers. I was on the point of going by, when she said coolly:

"Why Nicholas Trent. How are you?"

"I'm fine, Brenda."

"What are you doing here?"

"Eating," I said. "It's a vice of mine."

"I read about you in the papers," she said. "Father, you remember Nicholas Trent?"

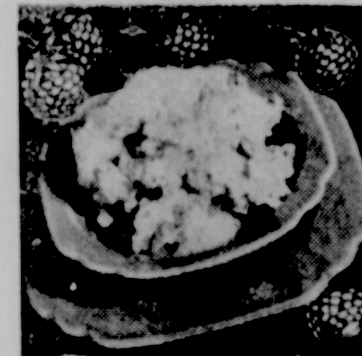

I looked at Bruce Temple. He was a great rock of a man with a face like a chipped flint. He seemed to be looking at me. "Can't say that I do," he said. "Come, Brenda."

And Brenda came. They walked out and left me standing there. They had acted strangely and the two of them lurked in my mind for the better part of an hour until I had more pressing matters to think of.

I drove down the Sandy Point road on a dark night as a man could wish for. When I got to the gates of The Ledges, I got out and fished in my pocket for the key to the padlock that held the massive wooden barrier. A light mist had begun to fall and it beat against my face like tiny needles of cracked ice. The gate groaned dismally as I swung it open.

By the time I had fumbled for minutes in the cold among a dozen keys to a dozen doors, the whole idea of vegetating for a week at The Ledges had become impressively nonsensical. The only thing that kept me from going back to town was the fear that someone would think that I was afraid of the dark — which I was at that particular moment.

Finally I got the door open and went inside. The bitter chill of a closed house laid its hand on my spine. I snapped the switch of my flashlight and the beam bur-

rowed feebly into the darkness. I saw the shadows of objects hanging from the ceiling and beneath, the glint of metal. I was in the kitchen and the suspended objects were pots and pans hung over the stove.

I went to the wall, pushed the switch, and a second later the fluorescent tubes sprang to light. Suddenly, I remembered Pat's words: "The electricity will be turned off, but there are oil lamps in one of the kitchen cupboards." That little feeling of warmth, upon seeing the lights, evaporated. I stood stock still and listened. There was no sound except the uneasy beat of the sea on the rocks beyond the far side of the house.

There was a rack of wood in the corner and a bin of coal beside it. I laid a fire in the big range, lit it, and then straddled a metal stock on stool to smoke and take stock. As the heat from the fire gradually filled the room, I felt better. I brought in the hamper of food from the car and went to the electric refrigerator. I swung open the door; the light flashed on, and I set the hamper carefully down on the floor. The chest was completely stocked with food.

I shut the door and stood rubbing my chin and looking thoughtfully across the kitchen at the white swinging door with the black leather panels. Beyond that should be the dining room. And beyond that, if I remember correctly, somewhere on the sea-side of the house, Phineas Hudson's library, high-vaulted with a great beam-studded ceiling and paneled with somber, thought-stifling fumed oak. There was a fireplace in it large enough to burn a forest of trees, and a chair soft and deep enough to sleep in.

I started through the swinging door resolutely enough. The feeble beam of my flashlight was lost in the vastness of that dining room. I began to look for the light switch. I could hear the rain beating against the windows, and as I started along the wall in a systematic search for the light, I heard another sound. It stopped me. A low short rumble. For a single instant I could not identify it. Then I had it. Thunder. End of summer, we used to say, when a single peal of thunder came in the fall. And I started along the wall again, laughing a bit shakily at myself.

Then I heard a second sound and it wasn't thunder. It was much too soft and stealthy for that. This time just the faintest noise like a quick intake of breath. Now my every sense was alive with red lights. I kept moving, feeling along the wall for the switch, pointing the beam ahead of me.

I reached a corner and turned my light onto the next wall. And the pale beam fell squarely upon the face of a man.

Tournament Side Glances

RESULTS AT KENT
Akron Norton 42, Canton St. John 34.
Columbiana 72, Yorkville 44.
(Winners clash at 8 p. m. Saturday at Kent.)

Although hashing over a victory after it's won is bad business sometimes, it is interesting to note that Yorkville, beaten last night by a potent Clipper squad, had won 21 of 25 games before nipped in tourney play.

Most impressive in the Yorkville regular season record were wins over Class A schools like Bellaire, Bridgeport, Wheeling Central, Mingo Junction, and on and on down the list. Of the four defeats, three were to top Class A schools.

The victory last night by Columbiana wins them a try at highly-touted Akron Norton, the gang of giants, at 8 p. m. Saturday. The winner of that all-important clash will journey to Springfield to be one of four finalists for the Ohio Class B crown next week.

The most impressive thing noted about Columbiana along the press row at Kent has been their "stick-to-itiveness" straight through a ball game, regardless of the lead they have. There is no slackening up and no loafing on that ball club at any time. That makes for champions.

To stop Norton, a club with five six-footers, two around the six-five mark, Columbiana will have but one tough job. That will be to tag down Harold Boughman, third string All-Ohio B. center. He caged 21 last night and looked mighty potent doing it.

Boughman and a pal, Harold Rizer, six-foot-five, will have the reach on Harry Hollinger and the going will be rough for the Clippers' big boy. If Boughman is stopped, Norton is stopped. That's the whole story about this ball club with 29 wins and three losses so far this year!

Columbiana breaks like lightning and shoots often. Norton moves slowly, controls the backboards and pops them from away out. Whether the fast system or the older "slower" system will triumph is what fans will find out Saturday night in what looms as a "game of games".

The possibility of an all-Canton state finals in the Class A cage race next week is a distinct and odd feature of this 1945 basketball tournament.

Through the "luck of the draw" last Sunday, Coach Bup Rierick picked the cube which entitled his outfit to play in the Zanesville regional tonight. In meeting Lancaster there, McKinley looms as a favorite and should be able to take the winner of the East Liverpool Zanesville game.

The other Canton favorite—Timken—is favored to take the Kent regional also, and if both Rierick's and Daney Myers' outfits win, they will be almost certain to meet in Toledo next Saturday.

Besides the McKinley-Lancaster and East Liverpool-Zanesville games at Zanesville, at Kent, Timken tackles an old rival, Massillon, and Ellyria takes on Ashtabula. Timber defeated Massillon 47-37 earlier in the season.

Tournament Side Glances

RESULTS AT KENT
Akron Norton 42, Canton St. John 34.
Columbiana 72, Yorkville 44.
(Winners clash at 8 p. m. Saturday at Kent.)

Although hashing over a victory after it's won is bad business sometimes, it is interesting to note that Yorkville, beaten last night by a potent Clipper squad, had won 21 of 25 games before nipped in tourney play.

Most impressive in the Yorkville regular season record were wins over Class A schools like Bellaire, Bridgeport, Wheeling Central, Mingo Junction, and on down the list. Of the four defeats, three were to top Class A schools.

The victory last night by Columbiana wins them a try at highly-touted Akron Norton, the gang of giants, at 8 p. m. Saturday. The winner of that all-important clash will journey to Springfield to be one of four finalists for the Ohio Class B crown next week.

The most impressive thing noted about Columbiana along the press row at Kent has been their "stick-to-itiveness" straight through a ball game, regardless of the lead they have. There is no slackening up and no loafing on that ball club at any time. That makes for champions.

To stop Norton, a club with five six-footers, two around the six-five mark, Columbiana will have but one tough job. That will be to tag down Harold Boughman, third string All-Ohio B center. He caged 21 last night and looked mighty potent to do it.

Boughman and a pal, Harold Risor, six-foot five, will have the reach on Harry Hollinger and the going will be rough for the Clippers' big boy. If Boughman is stopped, Norton is stopped. That's the whole story about this ball club with 29 wins and three losses so far this year!

Columbiana breaks like lightning and shoots often. Norton moves slowly, controls the backboards and pops them from away out. Whether the fast system or the older "slower" system will triumph is what fans will find out Saturday night in what looms as a "game of games".

The possibility of an all-Canton state finals in the Class A cage race next week is a distinct and odd feature of this 1945 basketball tournament.

Through the "luck of the draw" last Sunday, Coach Bup Rearick picked the cube which entitled his outfit to play in the Zanesville regional tonight. In meeting Lancaster there, McKenley loomed as a favorite and should be able to take the winner of the East Liverpool Zanesville game.

The other Canton favorite—Timken—is favored to take the Kent regional also, and if both Rearick's and Danny Myers' outfits win they will be almost certain to meet in Toledo next Saturday.

Besides the McKenley-Lancaster and East Liverpool-Zanesville games at Zanesville at Kent, Timken tackles an old rival, Massillon, and Elvira takes on Ashtabula. Timber defeated Massillon 47-37 earlier in the season.

Win War—Build for Peace

Kiwanians' Theme for '45

Basing its community service program for the coming year on 10 far-reaching objectives, the Salem Kiwanis club announced today that "Win the War—Build for Peace" would be its administrative theme for 1945.

H. D. Smith, president, said that Kiwanis International's more than 139,000 members in some 2,250 communities throughout the United States and Canada had pledged time and effort to the fulfillment of the objectives which were adopted at a recent wartime meeting of the service organization in Chicago.

The earliest libraries were probably temples.

Win War—Build for Peace Kiwanians' Theme for '45

Basing its community service program for the coming year on 10 far-reaching objectives, the Salem Kiwanis club announced today that "Win the War—Build for Peace" would be its administrative theme for 1945.

H. D. Smith, president, said that Kiwanis International's more than 139,000 members in some 2,250 communities throughout the United States and Canada had pledged time and effort to the fulfillment of the objectives which were adopted at a recent wartime meeting of the service organization in Chicago.

The earliest libraries were probably temples.
